This from contributes its full share towards economy in domestic life, and is well worth the attention of every housekeeper. It is heated simply by a fire inside, like an ordinary stove. They are of different sizes, weighing from live to eight pounds. It saves one-third the time—an ironing is done with much less futigue—no danger of smutting the clothes, and when ironde they have a much better faith. Leather and Shoe Findings. J. H. Zimmerman finish.

It lends to the ironer a great degree of comfort, since, by the use of it, hot rooms are avoided, and the person is not subjected to the almost insufferable heat of a stove or furnace in warm weather.

A sufficient proof of the satisfaction which it gives, and the favor with which it is received, is the already large and still increasing demand for it, and which tells how fast it is coming into general use throughout the country.
